Boomerang thrower welcomes the sun

Bright sunshine lured Henderson Body outside with his boomerang Monday afternoon.

The day had a good wind, but the boomerang doesn't work well in the wind, he said. It doesn't return.

"When it's not working right, for whatever reason, you get a lot of exercise," Body said.

Body made his boomerang out of plywood. He has been interested in boomerangs for about six years—he makes them from different materials.

His favorite material is a good tree limb, oak or madrone.

It takes two days to make one. "You carve it by hand with a knife. It only takes 15 minutes to make the plywood kind with a jig saw."

He said a tree limb is best because of its weight. Body made a light aluminum boomerang once, but he didn't like it because it could have been dangerous.

"This plywood doesn't hurt. But I think the aluminum would really hurt if it hit someone," he said. □

Proposed tuition increase to push costs near top

by Jean VanGeest
Staff Writer

A proposed tuition increase is threatening to move LBCC to the top of Oregon community college tuition charts.

During the last school year LBCC ranked ninth on the charts. Full-time tuition was then $128.50 per term.

This school year LBCC ranks sixth on the charts at $141 per term for full-time students.

LBCC President Ray Needham will present a proposal to the Budget Committee this month asking for a 10 percent increase in student tuition for next school year.

The proposed increase would raise full-time tuition to $156 per term—making LBCC's projected tuition the second highest known tuition at an Oregon community college for the 1980-81 school year. Umpqua Community College will be the highest with a projected tuition of $170 per term.

It's hard to compare college tuitions "like apples to apples," Needham said.

One difference between LBCC and other colleges in the state, is LBCC doesn't tack on as many extra fees, he said. It's a policy at LBCC that students only pay extra fees on materials they take home or sell. Other expenses such as towel fees, glass breakage and materials needed for instructional purposes are paid by the school, Needham said.

Two other proposals affecting student pocketbooks will be presented to the LBCC Board of Education tomorrow night. One would create an accident insurance package for students. The other would increase fees for classes which include a great deal of travel in school vans. Needham said both amendments would mean additional charges beyond the tuition increase.

Not all community colleges in the state have made a decision on whether or not to raise tuition for next year.

Of the nine that have made a decision, six will not be having increases.

The schools that will increase their tuition fees are Mt. Hood Community College with an increase of eight percent; Central Oregon Community College with nine percent increase, and Umpqua Community College with a 17 percent increase. □

Council to decide on draft information table

LBCC's Council of Representatives may give it's approval of a table in the Commons to dispense information about the draft.

For the past two weeks, the Council has been discussing the set up of a draft registration information table.

Originally, the idea for the table was proposed by a student, but she has not attended the last two meetings. The 11-member Council has deferred any approval.

During discussions though, Council members have favored approval as long as the draft table dispenses information concerning both sides of the question.

The council will meet again Thursday at 4 p.m. in the Alsea Room.

The draft table will be among the topics discussed.

During their last meeting, the Council approved a motion to have plaques made up for the 13 picnic tables located across campus indicating that they were donated by the Council. A sign for the Fireside Room designating that the newspapers there were donated by the Council was also approved. Council members noted that the plaques and the signs cost will not exceed $125.

The status of the club reserve fund was also discussed in the meeting. The reserve fund is a fund kept by the Student Organizations for all campus clubs. Money is allotted to clubs for projects and if a newly formed club requests to be funded by Student Organizations, $25 is automatically given to them from the reserve fund. A plan to have clubs funded by Student Organizations report to the Council during the first meetings of each month was passed.

In other Council actions: Jim Montesi was elected as student representative to the President's staff meetings; the Rodeo Club was given $180 from the reserve fund to cover travel expenses to rodeos; a proposal to put a dart board in the recreation room (located next to the Student Organizations Office) was turned down because it could not have been placed in an area that is observable from the Organizations Office. Council members felt that they could be liable in cases of accidents. □

Barefoot in the Park opens

The Neil Simon comedy, "Barefoot in the Park," opens tonight in Tadena Theatre and runs through Saturday. Curtain time is 8:15 p.m.

Tickets are still available in the Campus and Community Services Office, at French's Jewelers in Albany, Coleman's Jewelers in Corvallis and at the Lebanon Center. Prices are $2.50 for adults, $2.00 for students, $1.50 for LBCC students, senior citizens and children 12 and under. There will be some tickets at the door.

Starring in the lead roles as the newlywed couple are Stephanie Geil-Fitchett as Corrie and Scott Kelly as Paul. □

Satire

Draft resistors crumble, but sandwich wraps endure

by Kathy Buschauer
Commuter Editor

Time: August 10, 1984, approximately 7:05 a.m.

Place: A drab gray, three-story building located on the corner of 7th Street and Pico Blvd. in the heart of Los Angeles, California. The building, formerly a womens hosiery warehouse, is situated directly across from the home office of Felix Chevrolet. Behind the Chevy dealership hangs an overpass of the Harbor Freeway that meets the third story of the building at eye level.

There is nothing special about this building. It is the same color as all of the other drab gray buildings in the area. Inside it has recently been painted a sterile hospital green. The building could have been built 100 years ago or it might have been built yesterday. Who knows.

Event: For the first time in history, the U.S. Army is giving pre-induction physicals to female draft candidates.

Mood: Unsure. Women are lined up outside the building where they have been for the last thirty-five minutes. Some are plotting amongst themselves as to how they can possibly obtain a 4-F deferment. Some women are crying. They have never been out of the kitchen or out from behind a typewriter before. They are afraid. Then there are some who accept their plight enthusiastically. They think that it is high time women were drafted and sent into the trenches with men. There are some who are smiling.

Anita Bryant, a celebrity, and Marabel Morgan, a co-worker of Bryant's in "The Right to Life" movement are milling about. They are speaking individually to all the "gals" and every few moments or so Bryant holds a megaphone to her lips and booms, "Resist the draft! It is a violation of God's will! You are all potential baby machines! You cannot be drafted!"

Suddenly, Morgan jerks the megaphone away from Bryant and screams defiantly, "I have the answer!" She reaches into her alligator skin pocketbook and pulls out a roll of Saran Wrap. She waves the Saran Wrap in the air. It begins to unwind and one blonde 18-year-old reaches out to pull on the end of it. She is laughing and crying at the same time. She has caught on to something.

Morgan throws down the megaphone and begins to rip off the 18-year-old's clothes. The girl helps her. A crowd of women encircles the two. Once the girl's clothes are all off, Morgan sheds her own clothes, grabs the Saran Wrap and winds the girl and herself together with it. Soon, all of the women join in and cocoon themselves together with the Saran Wrap.

"All we need now are the Martinis!" shouts Morgan.

Two astonished guards stand at the entrance to the building not knowing what to do, so they do nothing.

"Martinis! Martinis! Martinis!" The crowd of cellophaned women continues to chant. "Martinis! Martinis! Martinis!"

The Harbor Freeway overpass bows from the weight of the early morning traffic. Two Puerto Rican women who have already had their physicals are sitting on a bench down the street from the ruckus. They both have brown paper bags in their laps. One of them says something to the other in Spanish. They both nod, open their bags and pull out cheese and pickle sandwiches. The sandwiches are a soggy yellow from having too much mustard on them. The Puerto Ricans fold back the wax paper wrappings and begin to eat their sandwiches slowly while staring at the mass of cellophaned bodies.

Just then the Harbor Freeway overpass crumbles. It was an old freeway anyway. The early morning traffic jam lunges in big blobs of automobiles over the freeway railing.

Cars and people fly everywhere. They crash into buildings. Pieces of buildings fly too. But not for long. Seconds later, what was once a writhing mass of draft-resisting, crazy women becomes a motionless pile of building rubble.

"They should have stuck to wax paper," says one Puerto Rican woman to the other.

"Yes," the other replies. "They should have stuck to wax paper." □

CPR instructor corrects lab fees

Al Barrios, first aid instructor, corrected the fee schedule printed in last week's paper for CPR and multimedia first aid classes. If a student takes the classes for no credit, lab and book fees are $5.00 for the first aid class and $4.00 for CPR.

If either of the classes is taken for credit, a student must still pay $11.75 per credit. There is no tuition fee if the classes are taken for no credit. □

Letters

Writer should get facts straight

To the Editor:

In response to the letter submitted by Tony Nelson in your Feb. 6 edition, I think Mr. Nelson should find out the facts before he commits to paper his unsubstantial assumptions.

If Mr. Nelson ever studies Russian history, he will find that since the time of Catherine the Great (about 189 years ago) Russia has pursued India and the Indian Ocean. Between Russia and its goals stood Afghanistan. As of 1980, Afghanistan no longer stands between the Soviet Union and India. Rather, 100,000 Soviet troops now stand upon Afghanistan.

In his letter, Mr. Nelson states that "The Soviets are simply fulfilling the agreement they had with Afghanistan to protect each others' interests." It seems to me that that is exactly what the Soviet Union said about their invasions of Czechoslovakia in 1968, Hungary in 1956 and more recently, Afghanistan.

Mr. Nelson also states "The US has been telling the USSR for years that the only way they are going to get a piece of the Mideast action is by force." The reason the US started saying this to the USSR was because of the USSR's attempts to illegally seize (by military force) territories belonging to Turkey and Iran in the late 1940's.

Frankly, I do agree with Mr. Nelson when he states "Carter's campaign which only a few weeks ago was sinking in a quicksand of broken promises is now riding high on a new wave of manufactured nationalism."

But I do disagree with his assumptions that the new nationalism is manufactured and that it rose over Afghanistan. Our new nationalism rose after the illegal seizure of a US embassy in Iran.

I'm sure Mr. Nelson's fanciful assumptions were made with good intentions. I must point out that the road to World War II was paved with good intentions.

Albany transit changes schedules

To the Editor:

We would like to thank you for the article in the January 23 edition of The Commuter concerning the Albany Public Transit Service.

We are in the process of revising our schedules and plan to have more trips to LBCC. We are presently looking at six times per day which would be at 7:39 a.m., 8:10 a.m., 12:19 p.m., 2:55 p.m., 4:25 p.m. and 5:09 p.m.

We think that this would serve the students and workers of LBCC better.

If you have any suggestions that you would like to make on the times that we are presently proposing, your input would be greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,
O.M. Payton, Director
Department of Public Services

Insurance plan considered

A proposed student accident insurance policy will be presented to the LBCC Board of Education at its meeting Thursday night in Board Room A.

The proposed policy, drawn up by Dean of Students Lee Archibald, is designed to cover all full-time and part-time students. It would cover injuries from accidents on campus, in classes or in a school-sanctioned activity away from campus.

Archibald said the proposed policy would cover up to $5,000 for accidents and $2,500 for accidental death or dismemberment. There would be a $25 deductible/the injured student would have to pay.

The proposed policy would not extend to areas now covered by the State Accident Insurance Fund or the school's athletic department, which has an insurance program, Archibald said. The school-wide policy would cost an estimated $20,000 a year, Archibald said. The cost would be passed on to students when they register each term.

The insurance question arose due to faculty and administration concerns over accidents on campus and the lack of insurance policies by some students.

Archibald estimates 20 percent of LBCC students do not have any type of insurance to cover accidents.

The proposal to the Board is for discussion this month. Its approval or defeat would come at a later meeting.

If approved by the Board, LBCC would become the first community college in Oregon to have a mandatory student insurance program, Archibald said. □

Planning of 1980-81 budget already underway

by Charlene Vecchi
Staff Writer

Planning how to spend money at LBCC takes almost as much time and energy as spending it. Work on the 1980-81 budget started back in October, and it will not be done until June 12. The new budget goes into effect June 30.

So far, faculty and staff recommendations add up to $9 million.

Instructors handed in their wish lists to department heads last term. The department heads then met with division heads. Then the directors of all the divisions met with Dean of Instruction, Jack Liles.

Vern Farnell, dean of business affairs, had a similar meeting with directors in his area: facilities, the bookstore, personnel—to name a few.

Lee Archibald, dean of students, met with directors of registration, financial aids, counseling...

Out of each meeting came a list of "priorities," which go to a meeting of the deans with Ray Needham, college president, and Bob Adams, vice president.

The LBCC Board of Education will nominate a Budget Committee. Members of the Budget Committee will go back through all the staff and faculty "wish lists," deciding on the merits of each item.

Through the month of April, the

"We don't know what OPEC will do next week. We can only project the best we can."

—Vern Farnell

Budget Committee is slated to hold meetings "with students and staff." On May 1, at their final meeting, they must approve the document. It is expected to weigh about half a pound.

A public hearing is scheduled for June 12, and the Board of Education must then move for adoption of the budget.

Farnell is planning to teach a course on how the whole LBCC budget process works. He admits it is exhausting. But he believes in the system.

"It's a nice process. It brings in people from the public."

This year's budget is $600,000 ahead of 1979-80 and Farnell said salary increases account for most of it. The raises are already written into faculty and staff contracts.

Another big chunk of the increase is higher utility rates. In 1979-80, electricity cost the college $162,138; heat, $161,721. Budget planners are estimating $34,052 more for electricity in the coming year and $32,344 more for heat.

"That may be low," Farnell said. "We don't know what OPEC will do next week. We can only project the best we can."

The whole budget is based on projection. Everything is estimated, from the amount of income to the cost of paper and fluid for the ditto machine.

LBCC is trying to keep enrollment high because more students bring in more money. But more students also cost more. High enrollment in a program creates a need for more faculty, more supplies.

In the instructional area, programs with increasing enrollment get first priority on funds. More students have discovered the math and business departments this year. Each of those programs will be getting some new faculty in 1980-81.

Inflation is taking its toll on the cost of supplies in all corners of the campus. But welding seems to be hit the hardest with supplies up 50 percent.

Since this is the last year of the tax base approved by voters four years ago, income from community taxes hasn't kept up with rising costs.

Budget planners would like to funnel money into projects like a new heating system for the Benton Center, but the money isn't there. Boiler repairs are being funded, but the new furnace will have to wait. Farnell has a long list of "wishes" that are being postponed. Even those are "prioritized," in the order they might be realized—if a proposal for a new tax base gets passed by voters in the November election.

Farnell said that in planning the budget, old equipment is being repaired, before buying new. In all instances, the college is simply trying to "maintain the status quo," or keep programs and services at their present level of effectiveness.

In the interest of safety, three vans are being replaced. The vans get plenty of use by students going on field trips. All three are now four or five years old and have travelled past the 75,000 mile mark.

A few new programs are finding room in the budget plan, though. They are ones "that have been in the planning stage for some time," said Liles. Instruction accounts for five of the nine millions. One such program is Interior Decorating. □

Request for a pond sinks again

by Charlene Vecchi
Staff Writer

Bob Ross, biology instructor, requested funding for a pond to be constructed on LBCC property. He didn't get it.

"We used to do aquatic studies on the Freeway Lakes, but we couldn't get a van anymore," he said. "If I wanted to take five sections of students, it was impossible. We have a boat, and we had a trailer hitch on one of the vans."

"Somebody took it off. I just couldn't fight all the hassles. We've been talking about a pond for years. Why not bring the pond to the students if we can't bring the students to the pond?"

Ross said the college grounds have a good site for a pond with a stream flowing through. He feels a pond of three to five feet deep could be constructed easily by building a "primitive little dike."

The Freeway Lakes were a great place to study an ecosystem, and man's effect on it, Ross said. Students would take samples of algae and bacteria, then bring them back to the lab and study them.

He feels LBCC could make much better use of its grounds for learning purposes.

"I get a lot of requests from the community—Boy Scout groups call and ask, 'Do you guys have an arboretum?' I asked for help in putting in an arboretum. I wanted to landscape with Douglas firs and Ponderosa pine. How are students going to learn about native plants when all we have is European hornbeam, Korean black pine and magnolias from Georgia?"

"We landscape our grounds to appease the public," Ross continued. "Sure, we use the grounds for tennis and baseball, but do we need all this grass? We might have to educate the public that it's OK to have 'weeds' in our front lawn."

Ross has some questions about the methods used in setting up the college budget. He feels it is all superficial and "splash-color politics."

"How do you evaluate a lake with a computer?" he asked. "They (the budget planners) have a lot of confidence in us; they know we don't do things for frivolous purposes. But all I want to know is, how often does (the budget) get evaluated with real learning objectives in mind?" □

Funds set aside for decorating program

The Humanities Division has been hoping to start a program in Interior Decorating since 1978. The first draft of the LBCC 1980-81 budget is allocating funds to start the program.

Cost of the new course of study is estimated to be $40,000 the first year, $63,000 the second year and $69,000 the third year.

Humanities personnel sent out a survey to employers in Benton, Linn and Lincoln counties to find out what employment possibilities there might be for graduates of such a program. Thirty percent of the surveys came back. From the responses an average of 12 graduates could be hired each year through 1984.

Michael F. Murphy, labor analyst for the Oregon Employment Division in Albany, estimates 20 positions could be filled each year in the three-county area.

There is no program in interior decoration at any of the other community colleges. The University of Oregon confers a degree in Interior Design and there are two programs similar to what LBCC's would be in private schools in Portland. From the statistics, budget planners have decided a program of interior decoration might be a good investment.

The skill is tied in with retail sales of furniture, wall and floor coverings and home accessories. Graduates of the program might find work as aides to architects and building contractors.

"Retail sales are growing very well," said Bob Adams, college vice president.

The program would require hiring one full-time and one part-time instructor. Students would make use of many materials that the art department already has. The curriculum would include courses in art, business, drafting and general education that the college already offers.

To add the interior decorating program to LBCC's roster still requires approval from the State Board of Education and the Oregon Educational Coordinating Committee. Then the LBCC Board of Education has to approve it. Adams expects the program to come before the state bodies in the next two months. □

Happy Val

Historians are not sure of just why the 14th day of February has been designated as an international celebration day for lovers. Some speculate that on that day, each year, birds began to mate. In keeping with the custom, human hearts began to sing. The tradition grew. But hearts are a fairly common organ. They can be found in places other than chest cavities and on shirt sleeves.

In commemoration of Valentine's Day [tomorrow] photographer Jane LaFazio used her unusual photographic style to reproduce the symbol of the day on these pages. Have a happy heart-throb!

Class to study Shakespeare's plays

"The Second Season" of "The Shakespeare Plays," an upcoming public television series, will be the core of an LBCC evening course offered this month.

The three-credit, Community Education course by television features six selected plays produced in England by the BBC.

The performances will be aired over KOAC-Channel 7 in Corvallis at 8 p.m. on alternate Wednesdays. Beginning next Wednesday at 7 p.m., English instructor Jane Van Sickle will lead class discussion groups at Corvallis High School, Room 113.

Registration must be made on or before Wednesday.

Plays to be shown Feb. through May—in the following order—are "Twelfth Night," "Richard II," "Henry IV" parts I and II, "Henry V," and "The Tempest."

Each show will be rebroadcast by Channel 7 at 12 noon, Sundays, and by KVDO-Channel 3 in Salem at 1 p.m. Saturdays.

Those who do not wish to be tested for college credit may audit the course. Tuition is $35.25.

More information on the television course is available from the Humanities Division, ext. 219. □

Forest service jobs are available

Students interested in a career with the U.S. Forest Service can apply for several jobs through the Cooperative Work Experience program.

The job openings are in the Siuslaw and Willamette National Forests (Corvallis and Eugene). Full-time students in Business Accounting or Engineering Technology are especially qualified.

If a student works at least six months before graduation, he will be eligible for a permanent position when he graduates.

Application deadline is Friday, Feb. 29, through the CWE office, HO201, ext. 191. □

Oregon artists to display photo work

An exhibit of photographs by Oregon artists James Cloutier and Mike Catlin will be on display in the Library through Feb. 29.

James Cloutier portrays the characters and pastimes of Alpine, Oregon, a logging and farming community. The photographs are part of his book, which includes fond comments by the townspeople in their close-knit community.

The work of Mike Catlin, similarly, records what remains of Butte, Montana, once a prosperous mining town, and provides an interesting counterbalance to the photographs of Alpine, Oregon.

The exhibit is open 7:30 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Thursday and until 5 p.m. on Fridays. □

Fund raising bake sale is tomorrow

The Effluent Society, organized by students in the water-wastewater technology program, is having a Valentines Day bake sale in the Commons tomorrow from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Funds raised from the bake sale will help pay for a spring camp-out to study water flow, erosion and aquatic life in streams.

A coupon from this Commuter will purchase coffee for five cents with a bake sale goodie. □

Readers Theater tickets go on sale

Tickets will go on sale this week for the new production of the LBCC Reader's Theater, "A Woman for All Seasons."

Performances will be at 8 p.m. starting Friday, Feb. 22 through Monday, March 1. The price of all tickets is $2.00.

The show will be in The Loft, F202. It is a small theater, accommodating just 50 people at each performance, so space is limited.

The cast, all women, includes Joyce Easton, Kathy Freeman, Linda Grace, Valerie Hughes, Marie Oliver, Susie Titz, Tami Tobey, Carol Vaeth, and folk singer Maurleen Dickey. □

Industrial Technical Society presents seminar

by Jeff Thompson
Staff Writer

With the price of gasoline well over a dollar a gallon, and noting the skyrocketing costs to heat homes with electricity or oil, many people are looking to alternative sources of energy.

Here at LBCC, the Industrial Technical Society (ITS) is presenting a seminar March 29 on the current uses and technologies now being used and investigated in the fields of Solar Energy, wind power, water power and gasohol production.

It's a co-curricular club that serves all the technical areas at LBCC, (welding, metalurgy, auto body, etc.) and provides the community as well as students at LBCC with updates on current technology in use.

Dennis Wood, welding instructor, heads up ITS and feels that the club is an integral part of the technical programs at LBCC.

"The students need an organization to keep up on new developments in their field," Woods said. "Technology in these areas changes so fast that it is imperative the students keep up on the new innovations."

Wood says that the club gives the students the opportunity to get "hands on experience" with new equipment and to hear specialists from all areas of the technical industry explain new breakthroughs in the industry.

Bill Sands, student member of the representative council for the Industrial association, says that funding has been a problem this year for the club.

"We asked for two to three thousand dollars when we were made aware funding was available," Sands said. "But we were too late, and most of the money was allocated elsewhere. We ended up with $700."

The money is used to pay guest speakers for seminars and field trips for students but the main emphasis for the funding is specialized projects.

"We would have liked to build some alcohol stills and sell them to local farmers," Sands said. "We can't with the limited funding we received."

Richard Sedy, a student who is involved in the club, said that he and Sands are trying to get everyone involved in the program. "We started last year," Sands said. "But it was just this year we have really got things together."

He added that the club provides many seminars and they hope to involve the general public as well as the students.

"If we can show there is a large interest in the program, our chances of receiving more funding next year will increase."

Some of the workshops the society is trying to set up are log cabin building, millwright apprenticeship, gas combustion engine efficiency and estimating and bidding for construction work.

"The students are given a chance to have early contacts with the profession they are interested in," Wood said. "It also stimulates an early professional craftsmanship that will make them better quality workers when they are hired."

Wood also said that this kind of program is a great chance for community members to come and brush-up and update their knowledge of their field. □

Students start state's first homebuilders club

by David Kenway
Staff Writer

Sometimes it pays to know the right people.

When you do, even a small college like LBCC can offer some advantages to students enjoyed by no other school in the state and few others in the country.

In this case the students are enrolled in the two-year Construction Technology program (building trades), and the right people are Harry Armstrong, division chairman; and Jimmie Taylor, president of Republic Albany Corporation, one of Oregon's largest homebuilders.

Taylor is a board member of the National Association of Home Builders (NAHB) and a past president of its state and local chapters. When he approached his friend Harry Armstrong, an NAHB member since 1957, and suggested a student chapter be organized to promote the building trades at LBCC, he reached a sympathetic ear.

"He came up with the proposal and we set it up," Armstrong said. He and Taylor serve as chief advisors for the club.

The new chapter was sworn in with 39 charter members Dec. 14 at a dinner meeting of the Greater Linn Homebuilders Association, their sponsoring organization.

There are advantages to being a member in the only active student NAHB organization in Oregon, according to Armstrong and Greg Grinnell, the club's secretary-treasurer.

Members attending homebuilders meetings in Albany and Corvallis make contacts with potential employers that may prove invaluable.

They can also draw information on any building-related subject from the national NAHB library in Washington D.C., and get speakers on a local or national level from a speakers bureau.

Seminars on subjects like how to legally install wood-burning stoves are also planned.

General aims of the student NAHB are trying to upgrade the quality of trades associated with homebuilding and educating the public on construction industry issues.

"We are trying to make it interesting for everyone," Armstrong said. He invites anyone to join.

For further information contact Martin Allard, student president; or Greg Grinnell and Leslie Renquist, officers. They can either be found in the Industrial B building or in the phone book.

Harry Armstrong is also available to answer questions in the Industrial building room 111, ext. 136. □

Foundation offers scholarships

by Virginia Morgan
Staff Writer

If a student attended sixth grade at Albany's Sunrise Grade School in 1974 and graduated from high school this year, he might qualify for a scholarship offered by the LBCC Foundation.

This scholarship is one of several memorial scholarships administered by the foundation.

Bob Adams, college vice president, said LBCC's foundation exists as an administrative organization for the accumulation and distribution of special monies to help students get an education. Funds are also collected and distributed for special projects as well.

This year the foundation has a goal of raising $26,000, Adams said. Some $13,000 has been proposed to put a piano in Takena Hall and $13,000 for student loans, grants and scholarships.

The primary fund-raising activity will be an auction and dinner held this spring.

Money is also contributed by individuals, organizations, businesses and groups. Some specify the type of project the money will be used for like the scholarship for a student from Sunrise School.

Students, staff and others have also been making contributions to a memorial fund started in instructor Richard Hankey's name for a student in the Law Enforcement field. Hankey died before the start of school this term.

Rita Lambert, LBCC financial aids officer, said the Financial Aids Office has asked the foundation for assistance this year. They want help generating funds for part-time students returning to school, for short-term loans for GED completion, for money to replenish the student loan fund, to establish a long-term loan program of more than $65 per term and to help establish an athletic talent and regional skill award program.

Adams said as budgets become tighter and revenue from local property taxes becomes more difficult to obtain, public institutions are turning toward foundations to help in the crunch. Private institutions have long used foundations as a primary way of raising funds, he said.

Although LBCC's foundation is young at this point, Adams said he sees it becoming a dynamic part of the college in the future. □

Barbershoppers need more voices

The Men's Barbershop Chorus, a mid-valley group specializing in close-harmony singing, is seeking additional members to sing with the group.

It meets in HO 202 from 7:30 to 10 p.m. each Tuesday, according to chorus member Harry Armstrong. The chorus has 26 members and would like to have 50.

Armstrong said plans are being made for the group's 17th annual show, "Harmony Parade of Barbershop" March 28-29 at Lebanon Union High School.

Further information may be obtained from Armstrong by calling ext. 136. □

Library to hold Valentine party

A Valentine Open House will be held in the Library from 2 to 4 p.m. tomorrow.

Library and media staff will serve treats to all LBCC students, faculty and staff who stop in.

"What better thing to celebrate than love?" they ask. □

Killinger pins foe in school-record 29 seconds

by Rick Coutin
Sports Editor

When Phil Killinger pins an opponent, he makes fast work of Killinger, LBCC's heavy-weight wrestler, broke his own school record when he recorded a 29-second pin over Umpqua's Scott Seibert on Saturday.

"I think that record will stand for a long time," said LBCC Coach Bill Buckley, whose Roadrunners defeated Umpqua 31-21 in Roseburg.

The pin was Killinger's second of the season. Last month the 203-pound heavyweight pinned the same Umpqua opponent in establishing a LBCC-record 54 seconds.

Eighteen of Umpqua's points resulted from three LBCC forfeits because of injuries.

The Roadrunners also forfeited three matches against Central Oregon on Friday due to injuries. That resulted in a 37-16 loss in the LBCC Activities Center.

"Everybody's looking pretty good," said Buckley, whose team is 7-9 in dual meets this season. "We've been practicing real hard. We want to peak for the conference meet."

Ken Noble (142 pounds) won both his matches by fall—the first in 5:36 and the second in 3:48. Noble, who has now won six straight matches, leads the team with six pins and has a 14-4 season record.

Dan Scheafer also won twice over the weekend. Scheafer won 7-5 at 158 pounds and 19-3 at 150 pounds.

Bob Downs (126) won 11-2 against Central Oregon but failed to make a late comeback against Umpqua to lose 10-8.

Dexter Stothoff (134) drew with Kevin Wright of Central Oregon, 3-3, then beat Umpqua's Randy Gunn 16-3. Buckley noted that Gunn had soundly beaten Wright recently.

Tim Ysen (158) won 14-1 and Roger Schantz (190) won by forfeit against Umpqua.

Buckley said Killinger was leading Central Oregon's 400-pound heavyweight in the final period but found himself victim of the pin.

Andy Boesl (118), who did not wrestle due to injury, is 14-6-1 this season; Ysen 15-9; Scheafer 13-9; Downs 10-8-1; Killinger 3-4; and Stothoff 7-14-1. □

Loss destroys title hopes

by Rick Coutin
Sports Editor

The LBCC women's basketball team will now be playing for second place. Hopes for a conference championship were virtually destroyed after Saturday's 68-67 loss to Mt. Hood in Gresham.

The Roadrunners had demolished Clackamas 77-27 at home Friday, but Saturday's defeat put LBCC (10-2) 2½ games behind Umpqua (13-0) in the Oregon Community College Athletic Association.

"They (Umpqua) are going to win it unless they have a tremendous breakdown," said LBCC Coach Dave Dangler. "Right now the schedule highly favors them."

Umpqua has only three conference games left and needs to win two of them to clinch its second straight OCCAA title. LBCC will host the Timberwomen next Wednesday. But even should LBCC win, it's very unlikely Umpqua will lose to either Central Oregon or Clackamas—the bottom two teams in the OCCAA. Those games will be played at Umpqua this weekend. So the Timberwomen should have the conference title wrapped up before meeting the Roadrunners.

"I just want to make sure we don't drop below second," said Dangler. "If we can win two of our last four we'll clinch second. LBCC can accomplish that before the Umpqua confrontation by winning both its games this weekend. That would assure the Roadrunners the home court advantage for the OCCAA playoffs, which will include the second, third, fourth and fifth-place teams.

LBCC trailed Mt. Hood by seven points with 1½ minutes remaining. The Roadrunners pulled to within 68-67 but missed two shots in the waning seconds. The last shot rimmed around the basket and out as the buzzer sounded to end the game.

Forward Debbie Prince and Center Jean Melson each scored 17 points before fouling out—Melson with 3:33 left and Prince with 12 seconds to go. A total of 43 fouls were called.

"It was a very physical game," said Dangler, whose team stands at 17-4 for the year. "We're more a finesse team than a power team."

Karey Poehlman scored a season-high 16 points to lead LBCC's balanced scoring attack against Clackamas. Last time the two teams played LBCC won 76-26.

In OCCAA statistics this week, Prince ranks third in scoring (15.3), seventh in field goal percentage (.449) and 10th in free throw percentage (.623). Melson ranks sixth in scoring (14.3) and fourth in free throwing (.675).

In team statistics, LBCC ranks first in scoring defense (43.3 allowed), second in scoring offense (63.9), third in field goal percentage (.391), third in rebounding average (50.0), fifth in total rebound margin (-5) and seventh in free throw percentage (.514).

Three of LBCC's losses this year were by a total of seven points.

Results of last night's LBCC-Oregon College of Education junior varsity game in Monmouth could not be published due to the Commuter deadline. □

LBCC losing streak at five, drops into tie for last place

It just keeps getting worse for the LBCC men's basketball team.

The Roadrunners lost all three games last week and fell into a tie for last place in the Oregon Community College Athletic Association at 2-12.

LBCC lost 67-60 at Southwestern Oregon on Wednesday, 104-81 to Clackamas at home Friday and 73-63 at Mt. Hood on Saturday.

LBCC has now lost five straight games since knocking off Chemeketa 72-68 in Salem Jan. 26. The Roadrunners have also lost seven of their last eight games and 13 of their last 15. LBCC stands 8-17 this season.

Against SW Oregon, LBCC made one more field goal than its host but did not attempt one free throw the entire game. LBCC once led by eight points in the first half. Jon Newell had 13 rebounds and 12 points, and Jeff Goyins scored 16 to lead LBCC.

The Roadrunners and Clackamas each had made 37 field goals. But while LBCC was 7-for-17 at the free throw line, Clackamas was 30-for-33. LBCC led 24-23 at halftime. Newell and Goyins scored 21 and 14 points, respectively.

The Roadrunners rallied from a 10-point deficit against Mt. Hood to within five points with three minutes left in the game. But the Saints made nine of nine free throws down the stretch to avoid being upset. Greg Leonard and Newell each scored 16.

Newell leads the conference in rebounding, averaging 9.7 boards per game, and is 10th in scoring (15.5). Newell appears to have the rebounding title clinched as his nearest rivals are averaging 8.4 rebounds per game. □
